

J.M. McDonough has performed with TBTB in numerous productions, including Ten Little Indians, Dial M for Murder, When I'm 64, Oedipus, and Neil LaBute's Cripples, a part of the 2011 production Some of Our Parts. Recent New York stage performances also include Marks (and others), in the acclaimed Metropolitan Playhouse production of the original Uncle Tom's Cabin, Menachem in the NY premiere of Israeli playwright Motti Lerner's Pangs of the Messiah, Fetyukovitch in Brothers Karamazov Part II at LaMama, the villain Byke in Under the Gaslight, Senator Langdon in Deep Are The Roots, the voice of the living newspaper in One-Third of a Nation, and Dr. Lyman, in Bus Stop. Recent regional work includes Rev. Davidson in the East Lynne Theater production of Rain. Marty works on stage, and in television and film in and around New York and in the South of France, and is the voice of a variety of ads, animations and online video games. He played Jackie Mason's foil Campbell Davidson in "One Angry Man," and was a regular on The Chappelle Show (and yes, he is the white overseer Dave Chappelle shot.) He received his acting training in Washington and New York with Walt Witcover's Masterworks Laboratory Theater and the T. Schreiber Studio, and in England with John Barton and actors from the Royal Shakespeare Company at BADA, For performance reel, resume, and other links, go to www.martymcdonough.com
